Chapter 1 by Story Wars

I was right in the middle of my favorite episode of The Walking Dead when the program was interrupted by a news report.

"We have received word from NASA concerning Earth and Mars. Jupiter has exploded, propelling Mars towards us," the news reporter explained. She continued, "Scientists predict we have 17 hours and 34 minutes before Earth and Mars collide. Everyone in the Eastern Hemisphere must move to the Western Hemisphere in order to avoid injury or death. Get below ground or in a stable building everyone. This is the end of the world as we know it."

I sat in my chair with my mouth agape. I quickly called my wife and asked her to get the kids from school. She got the kids and I herded them into the basement. "Dad, can I go and get my iPhone? I left it in my room," my 15-year old son Brian asked.

"Yes, but hurry," I replied. I really didn't want my kids to get hurt. Brian was gone 1 minute... 5 minutes... 10 minutes.

"I'm going to find him," I declared, climbing up the basement steps.

As I opened the door, the quaking

The quaking was the least of my worries.

"Ahh!" yelled Brian (in a girl-like way).

I ran to where I heard the screams, only to find my son trapped under his bookshelf that held heavy items. First thing I said to him was, "I thought you were a man but your scream says something different."

"Dad, not the right time, save my iPhone," Brian said. "It is more useful than me. It's to my right."

I could not tell if he was being funny or not, so I found his iPhone, took it, and ran back to the basement.
